Empowering decision-making with unparalleled market intelligence

GEODIS resets the fundamentals of the supply chain industry by investing in the digital marketplace Uply

- GEODIS invests in digital marketplace Uply and pioneers a more efficient and transparent supply chain market to enable industry professionals to unleash their full business potential
- The first set of features, named “Smart”, provides instant freight quotes, enabling professionals to make pivotal decisions instantly.
- Uply’s neutral and transparent information provides a much-needed solution to the lack of flexibility and increasing complexity of contracting in the market that has frustrated both carriers and shippers.

The world of logistics had it coming. Uply, the digital supply chain solution, launches internationally, with the first set of long awaited features that promise to bring in more transparency and flexibility to the marketplace. Uply’s launch is part of GEODIS’ global digitization strategy: Marie-Christine Lombard (Chairman & CEO GEODIS), explains the rationale behind the Group’s strategy: “Our global strategy of innovation and digital transformation is twofold: while continuing to digitize our core business and to invest in our strategic assets to enhance both customer experience and productivity, we capitalize on our experience as the pioneer in 4PL to take it one step further and create a true digital market-place, meeting the demands of an increasingly fast-paced supply chain market.”

Uply is a double-sided marketplace that caters to everyone dealing with their supply chain. The Smart feature dispenses instant freight quotes for up to 100,000 lanes in addition to data-driven market insights. By combining anonymous and encrypted information extracted from the daily marketplace activity with benchmarks from secure partners, the marketplace’s proprietary algorithms reveal market prices and trends at any given time. In a competitive and volatile logistics market, these insights allow users to understand where they can benefit from market conditions, combine modes of transportation and secure capacity.

Boris Pernet (CEO Uply), explains the origins of the marketplace: “The Supply Chain industry is facing tremendous challenges. These problems highlight the need to reset the fundamentals so that the business potential of every player can be unleashed. Price volatility, information opacity, overbooking, last-minute cancellations, pressure on capacities and underutilization are all market defects that hinder the market's efficiency and its capacity to meet demand. Upply was created to overcome these challenges by combining logistics expertise and data science. Eventually, Upply will be the marketplace for users to make informed decisions and generate fluid exchanges. It is founded on the principles of information transparency, control and flexibility."

In the next few months, Upply expects to release new features that will enable users to buy and sell freight capacity on multiple modes of transport.
