

Maersk Line announces new Transpacific service

Wednesday, September 07, 2016

 Like 0  Tweet  Share  0  Pin it  G+1  0

Maersk Line is introducing a new service between Asia and the United States West Coast.

Copenhagen, 7 September 2016 – In response to the changing market situation on the Transpacific trade, Maersk Line is introducing a new service between Asia and the United States West Coast. The TP1 service will complement Maersk Line’s existing product portfolio on the Transpacific. The first sailing is scheduled for 15 September.

“We are responding to increased demand in the Transpacific. With supply chains disrupted, many customers are approaching us for transport solutions for their cargo. The TP1 service is a stable, long term solution to meet our customers’ needs,” says Klaus Rud Sejling, Head of Maersk Line’s East-West Network.

The TP1 service will be calling Yantian, Shanghai, Busan and Los Angeles/Long Beach. It will have six (6) vessels with a capacity of 4000 TEU per week deployed. The TP1 service will be part of the 2M network.

Find TP1 route maps on this link

Your promise. Delivered.